You're a good photographer and you really enjoy the pictures. It's time to turn your hobby into a business. You can start a photo business by following these steps: Write a business plan to manage and grow your new business. Set your goals and set out all financial requirements [source: SBA]. Find out what your country's legal requirements are for starting a business. You will also need to find out if your country has any insurance requirements. Come to the name. You can work under your own name or come up with a new one for the job. You might want to seek the help of a lawyer, especially if you want to include your business [source: SBA]. Open a business bank account. It's important to separate yourself financially from your business. Buy the equipment you need to get started. You don't have to buy every camera and image processing machine you dreamed of right away. Buy only the most important equipment in the beginning, such as cameras, lenses and digital storage. If you are going to shoot portraits, you will need basic lighting, wallpapers and accessories for tripods. You also need to buy basic office equipment such as computers, faxes, furniture and anything else you need. Make sure you secure your equipment [Source: Heller]. Advertise a new job so you can find your first customers. Send portfolios to agencies, newspaper and magazine editors, and artistic directors. You can also create a professional website that displays your wonderful work [source: Heller]. As you take more and more photography, continue copyrighting your pictures [source: Heller]. What's the secret to the perfect Instagram photo? With more than 98 million images tagged #interiordesign on Instagram, it's the perfect place to inspire for go-to interiors. And algorithms aside, getting the perfect frame is the first step in creating a beautiful, inspiring network. But as you scroll through your feed, do these breathtaking footage feel impossible to achieve? Victoria Erdelevskaya, an interior photography expert at Heal's, offered a few tips when it comes to photographing your home. Here's how you can inject some wow factor worthy of the magazine into your Instagram network. Use natural light 'When photographing indoor space natural light should always be the go-to option. The goal is to take your shots when the light is at its peak,' Victoria said. 'Artificial light can throw a blue or yellow shade that dampies the right colors and prevents them from glowing through your image.' Watch your room throughout the day. Each room faces the sun at different times of the day, so notice when your room is bright, but not flooded with direct light. 'A bright but cloudy day is the holy grail for an interior photographer. The clouds act as a natural filter, providing soft light throughout your space.' Adds. Heal's Meet the tools on smartphones Today are pretty handy gadgets, and good news, you don't need a professional DSLR to capture shots of your home's valuable magazines when your smartphone is already loaded with useful tools to help you level your photo.' My favorite trick for making photos look brighter and brighter is a little exposure setting. For a darker space, drop the exposure for a moody, dramatic feel,' Victoria said. Don't over-style the shot it's important. For an unobtrusive and authentic look, don't think too much about styling. Instead, opt for a vivid look. As Victoria explains: 'Instead of filming a perfectly made bed, why not record crumpled bedding or for a recording of the sofa, sit down and use the space as you would otherwise. The texture this natural movement adds will be picked up in the frame, making the overall look feel authentic.' Heal's/Dan Duchars Allow negative space... Try to avoid cramming too many elements into one photo because it can make your picture (and your Instagram network) look too busy. What you really need to do is give your images breathing space by turning on the negative space. Shooting an entire room at once can sometimes look like a photoshop commercial or real estate agent, so try to focus on one element, such as a perfectly stylized fireplace or cabinet. 'If you're photographing a shelf or any other stylised, flat surface, try to pull all your objects closer to the front edge, instead of pushing them back up against the wall, as this will draw a view into the frame,' Victoria suggests. Mark Scott ... and a lot of depth Use layers of accessories to add depth and texture to your image. You can try adding a toss to the end of the bed, a plant on the floor near the camera and a bunch of books on a small chair to give the eye a lot to receive. Heal's/Dan Duchars Shoot from the hip Take note of this: Test different angles when taking your picture. The lower the camera, the more dramatic the image will appear, which can completely change the end result. The angle you choose for the recording will vary depending on the room you're shooting. For the kitchen you don't want to be low enough to grab the bottom of the kitchen cupboards, but you want to give a sense of height,' victoria says. 'So play around holding the camera down to find the angle that works for you.' Similarly, take the signs from the height of the furniture. In the living room the furniture will be lower than in the kitchen, so lowering the camera below the eye level will make the sofa seem more plush. If the focal point of your image is lowered, mimic it with a camera. Heal's/Victoria Erdelevskaya Make your pictures a slice of life Say you never work with children or animals, but the opposite is true when it comes to your Instagram; Don't be afraid to include your children or your pets for a more energetic and funnier shot. Victoria explains: or pets pose for a photo, encouraging them to play in the space you want to snap. People want to feel like they've stepped through the screen and entered your home, so allowing them to be natural will just add to this.' You like this article?
